In the news today...

- In light of its stock taking a beating over allegations of potential financial wrongdoing, Red Rock has announced a stock buyback program to boost shareholder value.

Analyst Take: As usual in post-investigation adjustments, look for Red Rock's share price to respond positively at least in the short term.

- Moscow: Russian financial press has begun writing about plans for a pro-western reorganization of key Russian business sectors, which should bring the old bear nearer to Western markets in the medium term. No significant resistance has been observed yet.
- Tehran: Reports of violence in the Iranian parliament chambers cast further shadows over stable control of the government and its many nationalized industries.
- The much-awaited announcement from InterMed about progress on its next product Long Release leaves investors troubled in that the drug has not made substantial advancement through trial stages.
- Google has announced that it will cease any merger and acquisition activity for the remainder of the calendar year to consolidate a greater-than-expected number of mergers in the previous twelve months.
- Gamron announces that its latest anti-aging pill is ready for market.

- Highpoint's Board of Directors announced today that it has fired all of the company's senior management and begun a restructuring program.

Analyst Take: On its face, this is a positive sign as it shows that Highpoint's board intends to fight through any bankruptcy, but it remains to be seen whether this will calm investors in the medium-term let alone the long run.

- Wilson Technologies has announced that it has hired three key computer scientists from prominent research labs to continue to develop and expand its software platform.
- Congress has awarded the Department of Energy has announced an appropriation for a multi-billion dollar stimulus plan to encourage alternative energy production in the United States.
- A senior partner at Taylor & Tucker's auditing firm has resigned amid a confession that he concealed systematic accounting fraud at T&T.

Analyst Take: This is the answer to what many on the Street have been wondering: How can Taylor & Tucker be outperforming projections so much? It appears as though the Justice Department will be involved in what could be another Enron-type scandal on Wall Street.
